COMPREHENSION PASSAGE – 1

After he became chancellor, Hitler had to accept a certain degree of routine. This was against his natural inclination. He hated systematic work, hated any discipline. Administration bored him and he usually left as much as he could to others. When he had a big speech to prepare, he would put off beginning work on it until the last moment. Once he could bring himself to dictating, he worked himself into a passion, rehearsing the whole performance and shouting so loudly that his voice echoed through the neighboring rooms. The speech composed, he was a man with a load off his mind. He would invite his secretaries to lunch, praising and flattering them and amusing them. Most North Germans regarded such lack of discipline as a typically Austrian characteristic. In Hitler's eyes, it was part of his artistic nature: he would have been a great painter or architect, he complained, and not a statesman at all.

Hitler held strong views on art, and would put up with no disagreement. He passionately hated all forms of modern art. His taste was for the classical models of Greece and Rome, and the romantic art of the nineteenth century. Gothic and Renaissance art were too Christian for his liking. He also looked on himself as highly musical, though his liking for music did not extend very much beyond the operas of Wagner, some of Beethoven and light operettas such as Lehar's Merry Widow. He was also fond of the cinema and when the chancellery was rebuilt he had a little cinema put in, and frequently watched films in the evenings, including many of the foreign films he had forbidden in Germany.

He had a passion for big rooms, thick carpets and tapestries, but apart from this, he had very simple tastes. He liked being driven fast in a powerful car; he liked cream cakes and sweets; he liked flowers, dogs and the company of pretty-not clever women, he liked being home in the Bavarian mountains. It was in the evenings that Hitler woke up. He hated going to bed, for he found it difficult to sleep, and after dinner he would gather his guests round the big fireplace and talk on every subject under the sun until two or three o'clock in the morning. Next morning he would not rise until eleven. Hitler ate very little, and neither smoked nor drank. He kept a special vegetarian cook, and declared that eating meat or cooked meals was a bad habit that had led to the decay of past civilizations. He never touched even tea or coffee and the chief reason for his dislike to stimulants seems to have been anxiety about his health. He took little exercise and had a horror of catching a cold or any form of infection. He was depressed at the thought of dying early, before he had time to complete his schemes, and hoped to add years to his life by careful dieting.

1. The author says that when Hitler came to power he
 - (a) decided not to do any work he did not like doing.
 - (b) did not like to be controlled in his work.
 - (c) was obliged to work more regularly than he had done before.
 - (d) was forced to work more efficiently and much more quickly.

2. The author says that most North Germans
 - (a) disapproved of such methods of work, while Hitler thought they were romantic.
 - (b) disliked such methods of work because they were Austrian.
 - (c) liked such methods of work while Hitler complained of his artistic and romantic nature.
 - (d) approved of such methods of work while Hitler complained that he was not a statesman.

3. The author says that Hitler's ideas on art were
- (a) passionate and tolerant.
 - (b) firm and wide in sympathy.
 - (c) opinionated and intolerant.
 - (d) firm and tolerable.
4. Apart from his liking for luxurious houses, Hitler
- (a) liked a brilliant, aristocratic way of life.
 - (b) liked luxury and irresponsibility.
 - (c) liked pleasure more than work.
 - (d) liked modest and ordinary pleasures.
5. Hitler usually got up late because
- (a) he was always tired after having talked so much the night before.
 - (b) he liked seeing the sun rise before he went to bed.
 - (c) he preferred conversation to sleep.
 - (d) he did not enjoy going to bed late.
6. Hitler was worried about his health because
- (a) he was afraid of dying prematurely.
 - (b) his doctor said he did not take enough exercise.
 - (c) he was afraid that death would be painful.
 - (d) he feared that he may catch cold and other infections.

COMPREHENSION PASSAGE –2

The e-waste (Management and Handling) Rules, 2011, notified by the Ministry of Environment and Forests, have the potential to turn a growing problem into a developmental opportunity. With almost half-a-year to go before the rules take effect, there is enough time to create the necessary infrastructure for collection, dismantling, and recycling of electronic waste. The focus must be on sincere and efficient implementation. Only decisive action can reduce the pollution and health costs associated with India's hazardous waste recycling industry. If India can achieve a transformation, it will be creating a whole new employment sector that provides good wages and working conditions for tens of thousands of people. The legacy response of the States even to the basic law on urban waste, the Municipal Solid Wastes (Management and Handling) Rules, has been one of indifference, many cities continue to simply burn the garbage or dump it in lakes. With the emphasis now on segregation of waste at source and recovery of materials, it should be feasible to implement both sets of rules efficiently. A welcome feature of the new e-waste rules is the emphasis on extended producer responsibility. In other words, producers must take responsibility for the disposal of end-of life products. For this work, they must ensure that consumers who sell scrap get some form of financial incentive.

The e-waste rules, which derive from those pertaining to hazardous waste, are scheduled to come into force on May 1, 2012. Sound as they are, the task of scientifically disposing a few hundred thousand tons of electronics trash annually depends heavily on system of oversight by State pollution Control Boards (PCBs). Unfortunately, most PCBs remain unaccountable and often lack the resources for active enforcement. It must be pointed out that, although agencies handling e-waste must obtain environmental clearances and be authorized and registered by the PCBs, even under the Hazardous Wastes (Management, Handling and Trans boundary Movement) Rules, 2008, there has been little practical impact. Over 95 per cent of electronic waste is collected and recycled by the informal sector. The way forward is for the PCBs to be made accountable for enforcement of the e-waste rules, and the levy of penalties under environmental laws. Clearly, the first priority is to create a system that will absorb the 80000-strong workforce in the informal sector into the proposed scheme for scientific recycling. Facilities must be created to upgrade the skills of these workers through training and their occupational health must be ensured.

Recycling of e-waste is one of the biggest challenges today. In such a time, when globalization and information technology are growing at a pace which could only be imagined few years back, e-waste and its hazards have become more prominent over a period of time and should be given immediate attention.
